3x4 coaching.

We’ve taught coaching for 30 years.

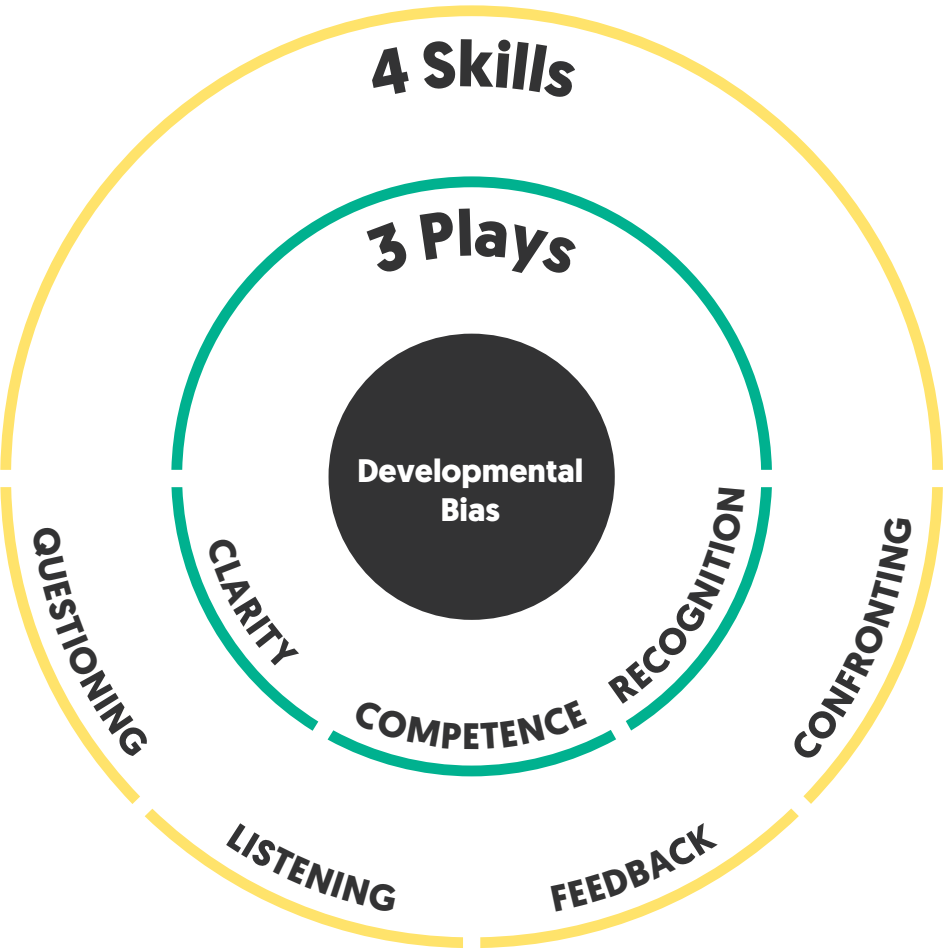

We’ve worked with great coaches for over thirty years. And over that time, we’ve seen again and again and again that great coaches are always interested in strengthening and empowering the people they coach.

They create environments for people to grow and develop, and help them become better at whatever it is they do. And through our work with great coaches, we know the best of them get results, keep people engaged and improve performance using three plays, backed up by four core communication skills. We call it 3x4 Coaching.

Participants will be able to:

- Define coaching and use the 3x4 Coaching model to drive high performance in others
- Build the competence and confidence of their people
- Create self-awareness and responsibility in others through effective questioning and active listening
- Deliver competent, relevant, meaningful feedback
- Recognize people in a manner that is targeted, relevant and reinforces the behavior that drives performance
- Create an action plan to transfer skills to the workplace, building in support and accountability

The three plays and four skills of great coaches

In our 30 years of working with world-class coaches we’ve observed that, as unique as coaches are, the best of the best all consistently execute 3 plays using 4 communication skills rooted in a strong bias toward developing others.

Managing challenging conversations.

Master the toughest coaching conversations.

We’ve worked with great coaches for over thirty years – and out of all the roles of a coach, the toughest is learning how to productively confront issues as they arise.

Great coaches don’t hesitate to confront problem behaviors – and they do it in a way that gets the performer committed to making the behavior change and strengthens the relationship at the same time.

Managing challenging conversations recognizes that effective confronting is as emotional as it is practical – and gives participants a way to manage both the conversation and themselves to get results.

Participants will be able to:

- Draw on an understanding of their personal tendencies in addressing conflict (gained using the Thomas-Kilmann Conflict Management Instrument), and make adjustments in the heat of the moment
- Prepare for a challenging conversation using a custom planning tool
- Identify and avoid common roadblocks to positive outcomes
- Practice a process to bring emotions under control and listen attentively to others
- Practice achieving the balance between accessing skills and managing themselves during a conversation

A practical map for confronting

Rooted in our 30 years of experience in helping elite athletes manage emotions under intense pressure, participants will learn a practical map for challenging conversations and a set of self-awareness and self-management techniques to access these skills in the heat of the moment.

Career conversations.

Drive engagement at all levels of the organization.

Helping employees develop a clear and compelling view of their path forward in the organization is at the heart of keeping employees engaged and motivated through change. And yet, many leaders find these conversations uncomfortable or challenging, so they avoid them.

Career Conversations is a highly interactive session for people leaders that helps them understand the why, what and how of effective developmental conversations with their people.

Participants are introduced to a coaching mindset that puts developing others at the heart of what they do, gain clarity on what a strong career conversation looks and sounds like, and develop a plan to hold meaningful developmental conversations with the people on their team.

Participants will be able to:

- Draw upon a developmental mindset and understand the importance of holding career conversations with their people
- Describe what a strong career conversation looks and sounds like, drawing on their own experience
- Ask effective questions to assess their people’s interests and motivations, current performance, aspirations and next step
- Use a toolkit with their favourite questions and actions to help their people determine their starting point, set goals, and commit to reaching them
- Conduct effective, ongoing discussions with their people about their development

Three steps to higher engagement

Conversations, driven by insightful questions, help guide and support others as they determine what they need to do in order to develop their career.

How do you get someone else committed to reaching their full potential?

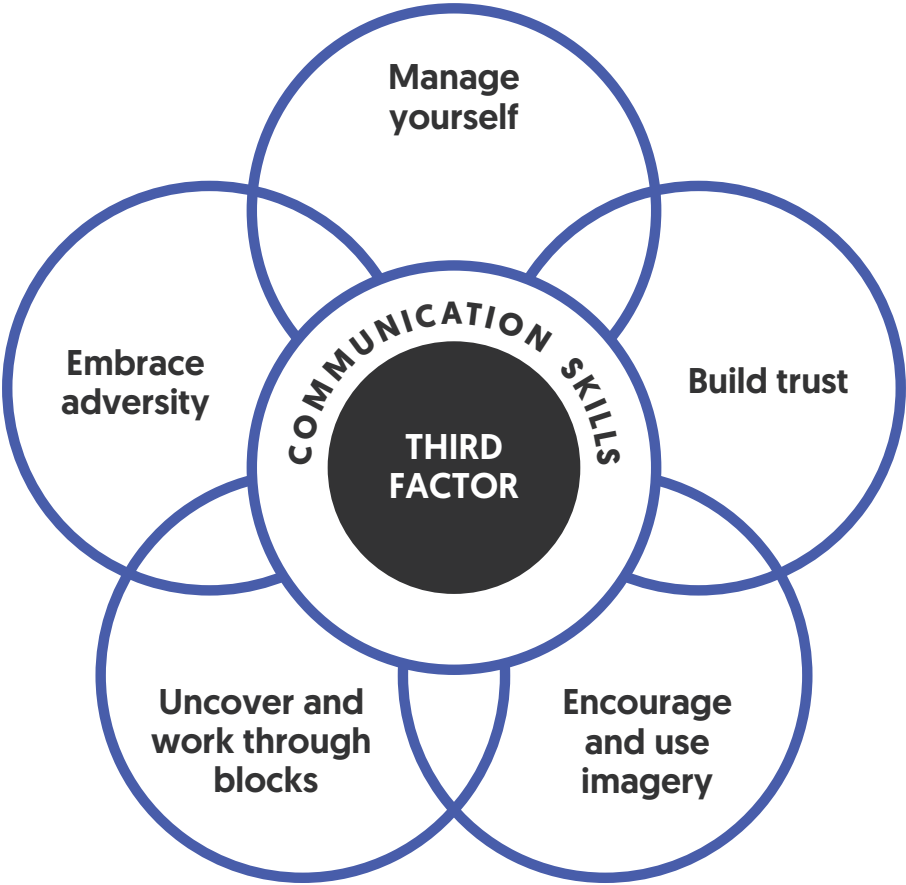

It’s a question that challenges new managers and seasoned executives alike, echoes through coaches’ heads as they watch a gifted athlete underachieve, and keeps parents up at night.

It’s a question that you need to be able to answer to move your work team to high performance and enable your children to achieve self-reliance and success. It’s also a question that Third Factor founder, Peter Jensen, has spent a lifetime investigating. Ignite synthesizes his life’s work to lay out the five core concepts exceptional leaders use to ignite high performance in others.

Participants will explore the five traits of Igniters:

- Manage yourself (so others don’t have to)
- Build trust – trust leads to commitment and committed people outperform
- Encourage and use imagery
- Uncover and work through blocks
- Embrace adversity – strength comes from tearing the muscle

Ignite high performance in others

This interactive session works through an easy-to-understand model, providing a clear view of what separates ‘igniters’ from ‘extinguishers’ and explores a wealth of strategies you can put to use immediately in your world.

Resilience.

Success in high pressure situations hinges not just on your skills and knowledge, but also on your ability to recover and remain energized: in other words, to be resilient. Rooted in our work with elite performers in sport and business, our programs help people learn and practice a practical tool-kit for resilience.

“

Building Resilience was a huge success at our leadership summit. The combination of a practical resilience toolkit, a robust self-assessment, and a great mix of teaching and discussion created an atmosphere for everyone to gain the skills needed to manage the pressure they face. It is a fantastic program.”

– Travis K. Brewer, PhD
Head of Talent Development, Carlisle Companies

CARLISLE

Building resilience.

We’ve taught resilience for 30 years.

The Building Resilience program synthesizes 30 years of science-backed and performance-proven strategies into a practical toolkit that participants can use to stay healthy under pressure and recover when they are thrown off balance.

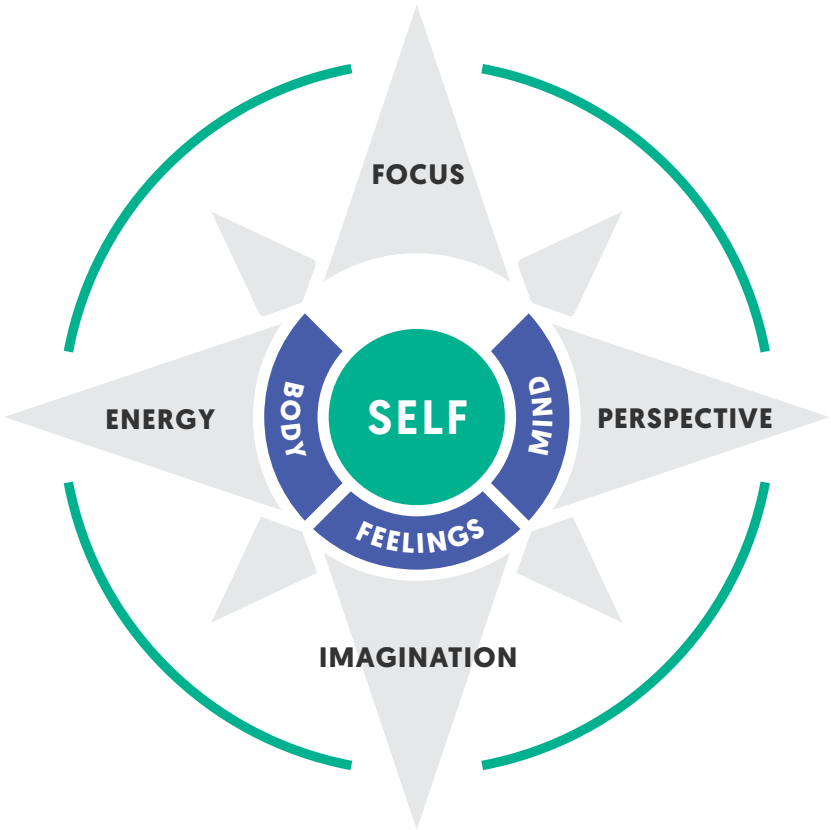

Our approach to resilience draws on work in elite sport, teaching and research in academia, and work with thousands of people in organizations of all sizes.

Combining an assessment, self-paced learning, instructor-led practice sessions, 1:1 coaching, and application challenges, Building Resilience is a transformative experience that allows participants to learn in the flow of work while changing the way they relate to pressure.

Participants will be able to:

- Discover the sources of pressure in their lives and the strengths they have to draw on through the Resiliency Map self-assessment
- Become more mindful and aware of the choices they have under pressure
- Learn to carry more energy through the week by reducing wasted energy and improving their ability to recover
- Appropriately focus their priorities to establish a sense of control and reduce ‘noise’

Perform, recover, grow

Building Resilience is aimed at giving participants a toolkit of inner skills to navigate their high pressure realities. They learn skills for maintaining an optimistic and healthy perspective through difficult times, methods for managing and sustaining energy for optimal performance, how to access and use mental imagery to enhance resilience and a strategy to remain engaged during challenges. These inner skills transform the stress and pressure inherent in moving forward into a growth experience.

Maintaining team motivation.

Tapping deep reservoirs of motivation.

When teams face challenging times, leaders have four allies to preserve motivation and fight the tide of disillusionment: channeling the energy under negative emotion, growing relationships, connecting people with progress and building a sense of shared purpose.

Drawing on examples from elite coaches and performers in the world of sport, business and beyond, Maintaining Team Motivation gives participants a clear sense of what they can do to keep people energized, resilient and motivated through challenging periods – and a practical plan for putting those strategies into play.

Participants will be able to:

- Reflect on the emotional state of their team and establish relevant goals
- Discover how a team’s emotional state evolves through times of crisis
- Explore the four main drivers of motivation under pressure – negative emotion, relationships, progress and shared meaning – and how to tap into them
- Use self-assessments, breakout sessions, self-reflection and group discussion to build self-awareness and plan for behavior change
- Create an action plan to apply what they’ve learned to their team

Four allies to fight disillusionment

When teams face challenging times, leaders have four allies to preserve motivation and fight the tide of disillusionment: channeling the energy under negative emotion, growing relationships, connecting people with progress and building a sense of shared purpose.

The meta-skilled organization.

Adaptation, not just execution.

Skills allow us to execute. Meta-skills like empathy, resilience, creativity, and self-awareness allow us to evolve. As organizations and industries face increasingly rapid change and disruption, in which job descriptions are fluid and agility is essential, meta-skills are fast becoming the currency of talent.

Individuals and organizations that foster the development of meta-skills, and cultivate the ability to evolve, are those that will ultimately survive the rising pace of change.

Packed with ideas on both how to foster the development of meta-skills for yourself, and how to build meta-skilled organizations as stewards of talent, The Meta-Skilled Organization lays out a framework for six key meta-skills that allow individuals and organizations to see clearly, move quickly, and stay the course towards a new and different future.

Participants will explore:

- How the nature of work is being upended by rapid digitization and changing social norms
- Six key meta-skills in three categories: See Clearly, Move Quickly, and Stay The Course
- A four-step plan to start building meta-skilled organizations

Meta-skills are the connective tissue that allow people and organizations to let go of the skills that have anchored their successful past and master and embrace new ways of working – in other words, to evolve.

The power of pressure.

Nail the moments that matter.

How we navigate periods of intense pressure has a huge impact on the trajectory of our lives. It impacts how successful we are in our careers, how much we enjoy the journey, and how much regret we carry.

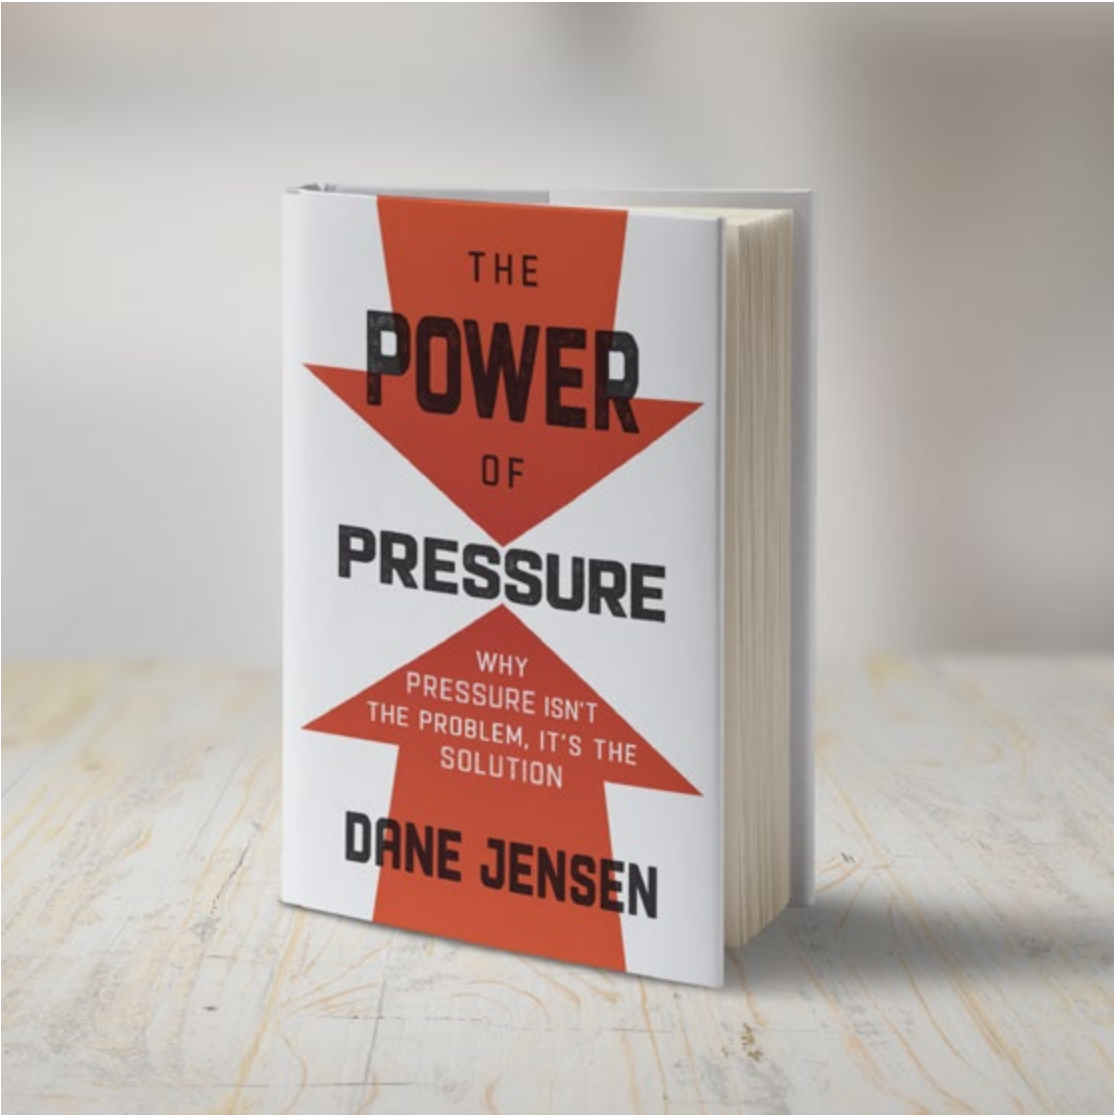

Drawing insights from his book, The Power of Pressure: Why Pressure isn’t the Problem, It’s the Solution, Dane Jensen’s new keynote address introduces three powerful strategies for using pressure as an advantage.

Audiences will hear unforgettable stories of pressure, learn practical skills for performing in peak moments and over the long haul, and come away with renewed energy for tackling the biggest sources of pressure in their lives.

Participants will learn tp:

- Use the ‘pressure equation’ of importance, uncertainty and volume to anticipate and prepare for pressure
- Nail the peak pressure moments that can make or break a big sale, a crucial meeting, or define a career
- Maintain energy and motivation through long periods of sustained pressure to emerge with satisfaction and free from regret

What’s the most pressure you’ve ever been under?

Third Factor CEO Dane Jensen has asked this question of thousands of people, from Olympic athletes and Navy SEALs to over-worked managers and busy parents, and discovered that while each experience is unique, pressure has patterns. These patterns are somewhat counter-intuitive, but once we learn to recognize them we can learn to use the energy that accompanies pressure to thrive. In short, pressure can be a wind at our back instead of a weight on our shoulders.

These lessons, along with some of the most incredible stories Dane heard, have all gone into his new book, The Power of Pressure: Why Pressure Isn’t the Problem, it’s the Solution.

Entertaining and insightful! A great resource for anyone who wants to excel under pressure

Thriving in a 24/7 world.

Energy management, not time management.

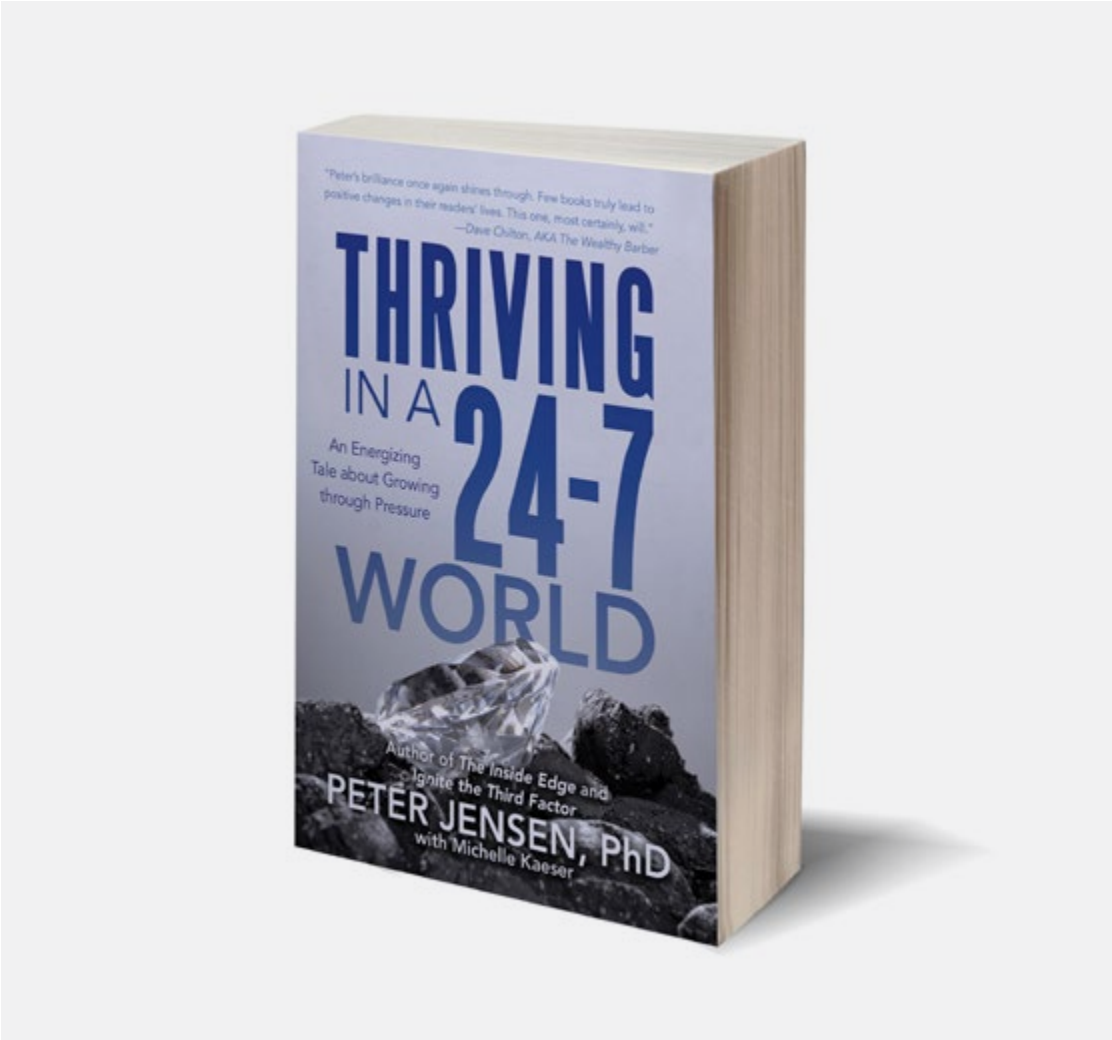

We live in a world where the number of hours in a day has not changed, yet the sheer volume of demands we face has grown exponentially.

In Thriving in a 24/7 World, Peter Jensen draws on his experience working with over 100 Olympic medal winning athletes, their coaches, and thousands of executives at Queen’s Smith School of Business to provide an entertaining and insightful tour of the energy management skills that elite performers use to help transform pressure into growth.

Participants will learn to:

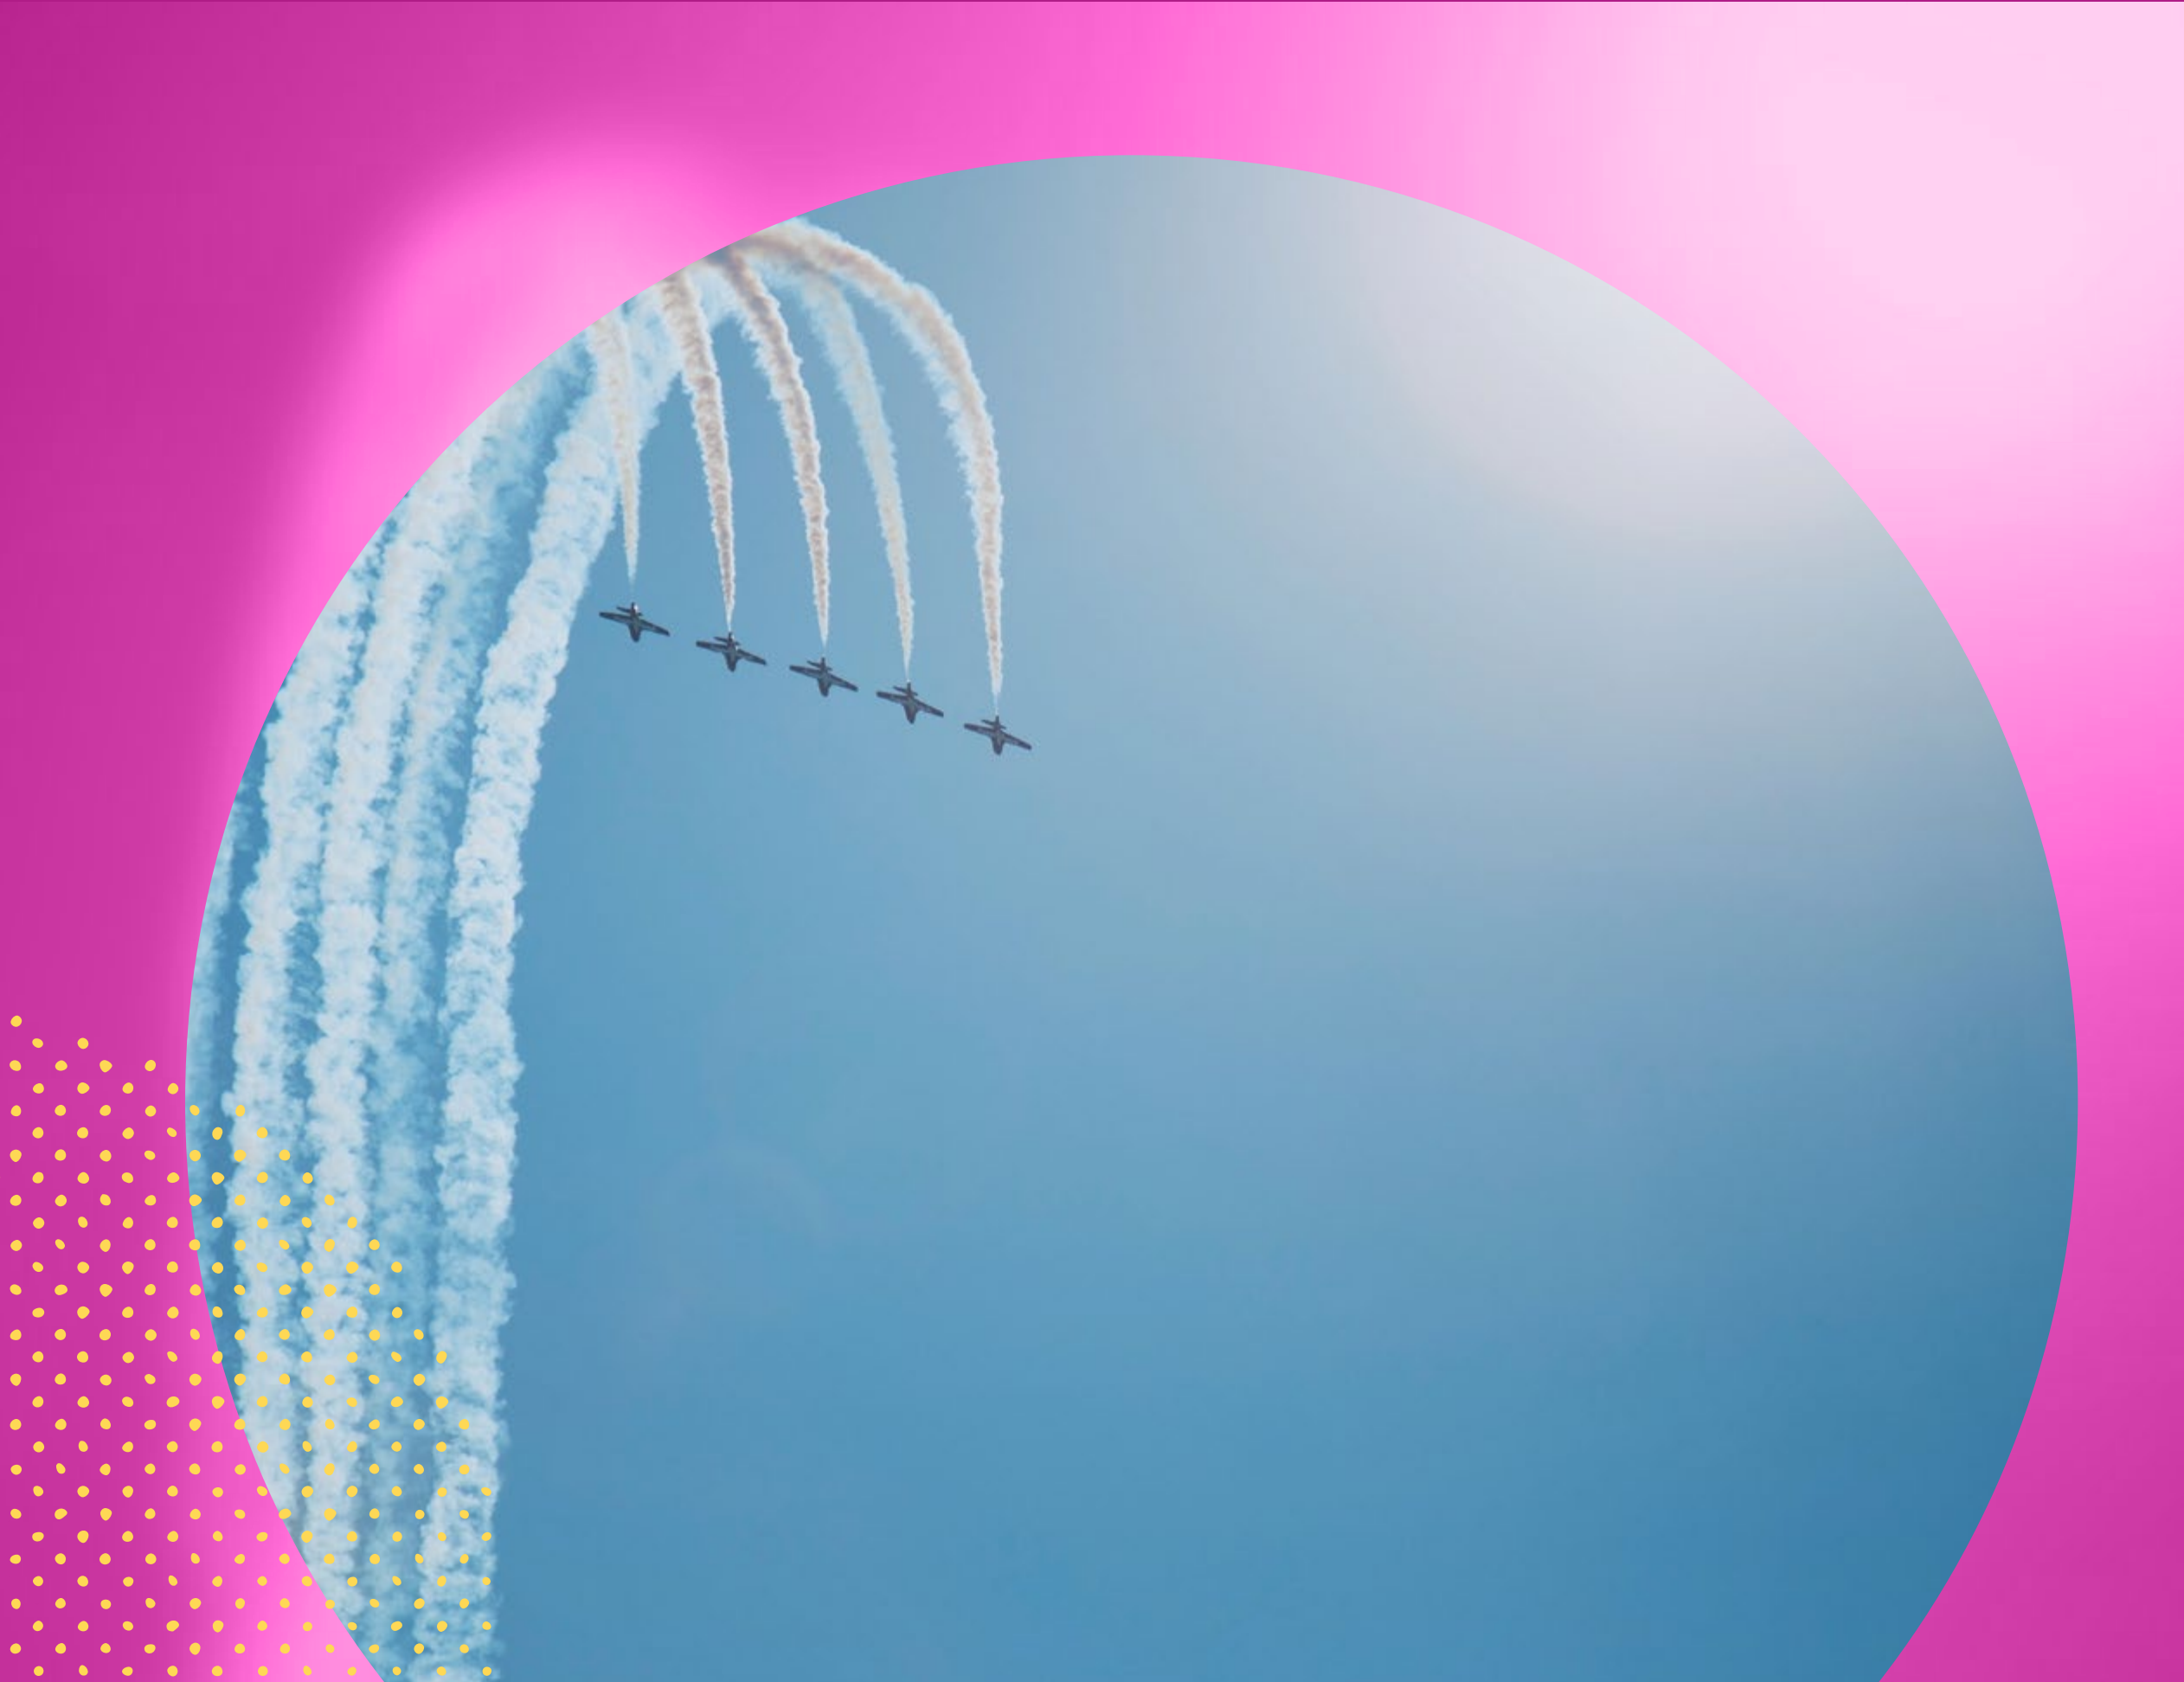

- Monitor ‘arousal level’ – the crucial diagnostic tool that allows you to gauge whether your energy level is too high or too low
- Maintain consistent energy levels throughout the day while getting more accomplished
- Renew and energize throughout the day

Transform pressure into growth

By striking a balance between moments of high performance and periods of renewal, ensuring we get enough rest and recovery, and learning the moment-to-moment skills that allow elite performers to turn their energy level up when they are flat or unengaged and turn it down when it gets too high, we can all learn to be more resilient – and to thrive in our own 24/7 reality.

Collaboration.

Our collaboration programs teach the self-awareness and communication skills that masterful collaborators use to work seamlessly across groups of diverse people, personalities, and organizational silos.

The Self-Aware Leader program has had such a positive impact on our business, we've begun using the TAIS as part of our onboarding process for leaders and made it a key part of the way we do team building."

— Ben Cowan-Dewar
Co-Founder & CEO, Cabot

CABOT

The self-aware leader.

Know yourself to collaborate better with others.

Research shows us that the number one predictor of executive success is self-awareness. It is the foundation for growth. Yet many leaders find that they are so busy handling the task side of their job that they don't take the opportunity to step back and reflect on how they can best add value to their people, their teams and their organization.

A leader's ability to pay attention to the right things at the right time will allow them to get the best out of themselves and others. They will better understand both the conditions that create pressure or drain their energy and how to create the conditions that allow them to perform at their best.

The Self-Aware Leader workshop is an individualized program that combines the TAIS assessment, one-on-one coaching and follow-on support. It will help leaders understand and leverage their strengths under pressure and identify what changes if made, would matter the most.

Participants will be able to:

- Demonstrate the link between self-awareness and performance
- Identify what they tend to pay attention to, and miss, when under pressure
- Clarify the type of work and environment in which they will do their best work
- Define the conditions that create pressure and drain energy for them
- Perform more effectively in situations outside of their comfort zone
- Develop strategies for decreasing errors they tend to make while under pressure

Know yourself to collaborate better with others

Excellent performers in sport and in business are seldom well-rounded individuals. They excel by understanding their strengths and learning to maximize them within their teams. Practical tools like the Player's Card allow people to share their newfound insights with others and raise the water line for collaboration.

The self-aware team.

Gold-medal collaboration.

This workshop goes beyond team building. It is a boot camp for intact teams that want to communicate, collaborate and deliver results more consistently. It has been pressure tested with both CEO teams and many of our Gold Medal Olympic teams.

It is a program that recognizes that there is both an I and a We of a team and people need to build awareness and skills around how to make this duality work. This program is data driven – unique to each team – and very practical. This is the program that we use with our Olympic teams in preparation for the games.

Participants have the opportunity to:

- Identify their strengths, challenges, and best ways to communicate with others on the team
- Gain peer input into their value, contributions and potential area of focus
- Develop a targeted strategy to maximize strengths and address areas for improvement

Teams have the opportunity to:

- Build a foundation of trust and respect – clarifying misunderstandings amongst team members
- Assess how their team is similar and different to other business teams
- Determine the unique challenges the team is going to face based on the similarities and differences among team members
- Leverage team strengths to perform at higher levels
- Assess and develop strategies to eliminate dysfunction thus creating an environment where productive conflict can drive innovation and growth of the team

Know yourself to collaborate better with others

Discover the power of a self-aware team. In this program, participants will deepen their understanding of how their individual style and actions impact others, while uncovering the collective strengths and potential challenges within their team. Through exploring style differences and learning to recognize and appreciate diverse approaches, they'll develop practical strategies to enhance collaboration and elevate performance. By leveraging the unique contributions of every team member, they'll create a cohesive, high-performing team ready to tackle challenges and achieve success together.

The Self-Aware Team program has been tremendously valuable. It allows everybody to be open about who they are and where they're at as an athlete.

Working with people you don't understand.

Better results through new mindsets.

High performing environments are most often made up of individual contributors who know how to get results. And the strongest contributors are the ones who are able to get results in a way that builds engagement in others.

Working With People you Don't Understand is a practical guide for contributors to get more of the results they want, and less of the results they don't want, while managing relationships and personal stress levels.

Using an easy-to-follow framework, participants identify the kind of results they want to achieve, the behavior that will lead to those results, and the mindsets of curiosity and generosity they can adopt to make those behaviors automatic.

Participants have the opportunity to learn:

- Why diversity is a critical input to high performing teams and develop empathy for where differences in perspective and behavior come from
- How our own mindsets and behaviors contribute to the negative outcomes we get when working with people we don't understand
- To use curiosity and generosity as mindset shifts that translate into productive behavior for engaging with people we don't gel with in order to improve our results and our experiences

Mindsets, behavior, results

Professionals who learn to work effectively with team members who operate differently from them will both gain and contribute the most in team environments. By learning to embrace mindsets – like curiosity and generosity – that research shows high performing teams consistently practice, team members can foster productive working relationships with individuals who are different than them.

Sustainment.

Sustainment gyms.

On-demand resources to sustain learning.

Third Factor’s sustainment gyms are online repositories of practice activities, tools, job aids, and resources to support participants after the “main event.”

3x4 Coaching and Building Resilience participants get access to a dedicated microsite filled with practice activities, job aids and resources to support their effectiveness over time. Each microsite contains downloadable skill and drill cards, a free podcast, practice activities and the latest thought leadership.

Learners are encouraged to share their story, and incentivized with a chance to win an invitation to our exclusive annual client event featuring elite leaders in sport, business and beyond.

Benefits to participants:

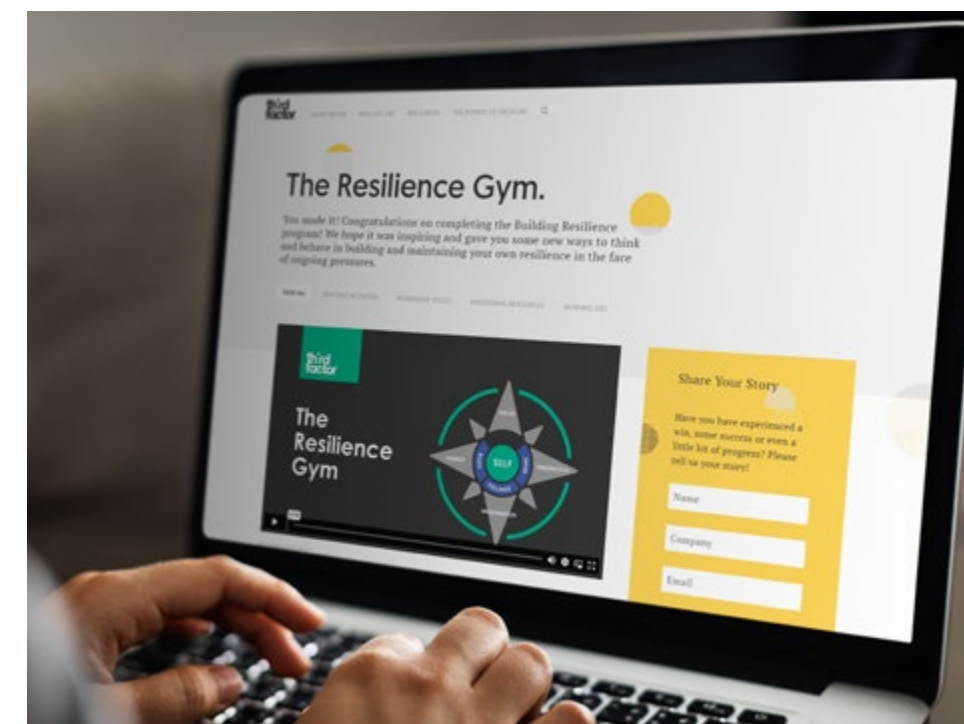

- Ongoing access to program materials and job aids questions and identify next steps for continued improvement
- Downloadable copies of skill and drill cards to quickly access frameworks and models
- Free podcast with critical skills and tools from the program
- Practice activities to build confidence in applying new skills
- Share success stories and read about others’ experiences
- Access the latest thought leadership from Third Factor and others

Benefits to the organization:

- Included with all 3x4 Coaching and Building Resilience 1-day, 2-day and virtual learning journey formats
- Gamification incentivizes participants to apply skills and share their stories
- Ongoing access to resources sustains learning and drives behavior change
- Regular updates ensure participants always have access to the latest materials and thought leadership

Strengthen your “muscles”

Just like a gym provides tools and resources to strengthen your muscles, the sustainment gyms provide tools and resources to strengthen your coaching and resilience skills. Participants receive ongoing access to a wide variety of sustainment materials to continue building strength over time.

1:1 coaching calls.

Sustain learning through one-on-one coaching.

Through our proprietary Trainer As Partner coaching process, each participant connects with their facilitator 6-8 weeks post-program.

In this 15-20 minute ‘support and accountability’ call, the coach reviews the commitments made at the end of the program, connects the participant with the successes, uncovers any roadblocks, and helps them identify a clear next step.

Following the calls, you’ll receive an anonymized report that provides insight into the nature of the commitments made and the successes, and roadblocks that your people are experiencing.

Benefits to participants:

- Direct contact with the trainer to review progress, ask questions and identify next steps for continued improvement
- Reinforcement of positive behavior change and reflection on missed opportunities
- Accountability to follow through on the action plan committed to during the workshop

Benefits to the organization:

- Data on the benefits and ROI of training in a detailed Impact Report
- External accountability drives improved commitment to behavior change
- Personalized support focuses attention on the specific behavior that will have the biggest impact on leaders and their teams

Material highlight: Impact report

Gain valuable insights from one-on-one coaching calls to understand how participants are applying what they’ve learned and the impact on their teams and the organization. Impact reports include quantitative data on participation in action planning and coaching calls, areas of focus, as well as qualitative data on patterns in participant behavior and case studies detailing participant progress and outcomes.

Group refresher session.

Reinforce positive behavior change through group review.

In the group refresher session, participants reconnect with their facilitator in a 60-minute virtual session held 30-60 days post-program.

Through a mix of plenary and interactive breakouts, participants reflect on the successes they've had, discuss roadblocks to implementation, and are guided through a process that helps them build on what they learned in the program.

Participants have the opportunity to review key program materials, identify opportunities to course-correct, and give and get valuable feedback from their peers.

Benefits to participants:

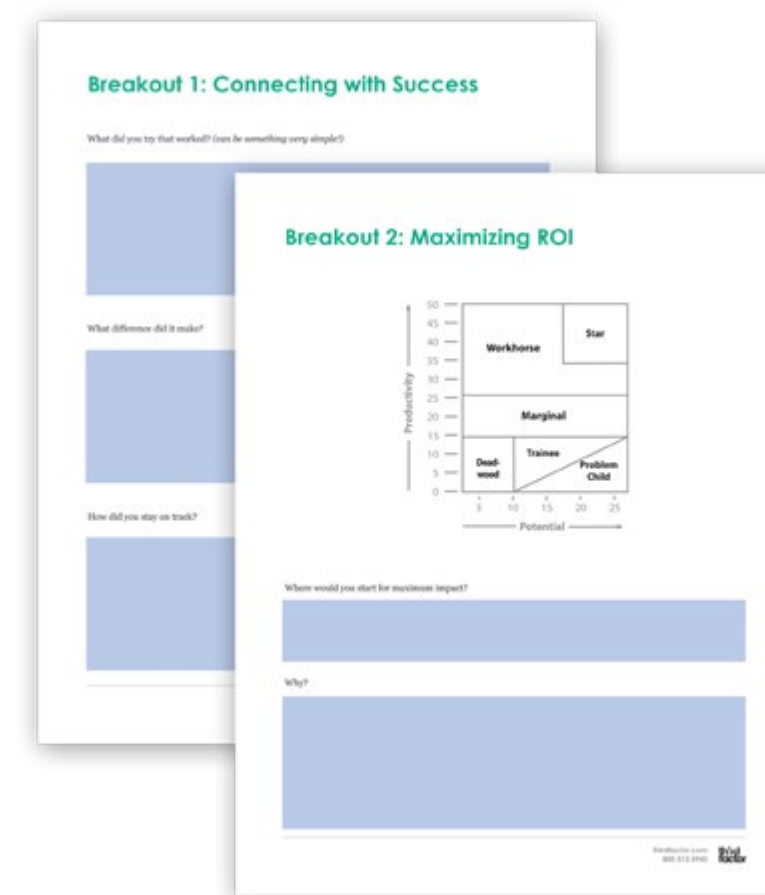

- Refresh core concepts with the context of 30-60 days of real-world application
- Connect with peers to discuss what works and what can be improved in the context of the organization
- Renewed focus on next steps to continued improvement

Benefits to the organization:

- Group discussion identifies and relieves common roadblocks to implementation
- Reflection on success and progress builds commitment to lasting behavior change
- Review of core concepts enhances learning retention and enables long-term application of skills

Material highlight: Worksheet

Participants reflect on the success they've had in applying the core concepts and identify opportunities to use skills that may not have initially stood out in the workshop. Group discussion enables participants to learn from each other's experiences and discover new approaches to gain the best results within the context of the organization.

Leaders inspiring leaders coaching panel.

Recognize successful leaders to inspire others.

Nothing inspires action like hearing from peers who are having tremendous success. In the leaders-inspiring-leaders panel, a facilitator will work with leaders who are having impact through their coaching skills, to create a highly interactive 60-minute panel discussion that will inspire others to take what they've learned and apply it.

Panel participants gain satisfaction and self-confidence from this unique form of recognition, while other participants gain valuable insights into the mindset and behavior that are enabling their most successful peers to achieve extraordinary results.

Benefits to participants:

- Renewed belief that the concepts and skills learned in the workshop can drive positive change
- Inspiration to re-engage with program materials and apply what they've learned
- Pride and satisfaction in a workplace that recognizes and encourages personal development

Benefits to the organization:

- Broader understanding of the mindset and behavior that lead to desired results
- Recognition of success reinforces priorities and contributes to organizational culture
- Review of core concepts enhances learning retention and enables long-term application of skills
